Background

In document N2621 "Revised Proposal on Tibetan BrdaRten Character Encoding for ISO/IEC 10646 in BMP" (a revision of N2558) it is proposed to encode 962 precomposed Tibetan "BrdaRten" characters in the BMP.

The present document is intended to show that none of the 962 proposed "BrdaRten" characters need to be encoded, as they can all be represented using the existing character encoding model for Tibetan.

Existing Character Encoding Model

The Tibetan script is currently catered for in ISO/IEC 10646 and Unicode by the Tibetan block (codepoints U+0F00 through U+0FFF).

Tibetan is written horizontally from left to right, but characters may combine to form vertical "stacks" of consonant and vowel elements within the horizontal flow of text, and in the existing character encoding model for Tibetan, such stacks are encoded as a sequence of one or many Unicode characters in this order :

- One base consonant in the range U+0F40 through U+0F6A (this is the first consonant in the stack, reading from top to bottom, and will either be the root consonant or a superfixed head consonant RA, LA or SA) or one of the superfixed transliteration letters U+0F88 through U+0F8B that are most commonly found in Kalachakra literature.
- Zero or many subjoined consonants in the range U+0F90 through U+0FBC (these will be the root consonant underneath a superfixed head consonant RA, LA or SA, and/or one of the subjoined consonants WA, YA, RA, LA or HA, and/or potentially any consonant in a consonant cluster transliterating a word from Sanskrit or some other foreign language).
- Zero or one vowel lengthener letter, the so-called "a-chung" [U+0F71].
- Zero or many of the subjoined or superjoined vowel signs I [U+0F72], reversed I [U+0F80], U [U+0F74], E [U+0F7A], EE [U+0F7B], O [U+0F7C] or OO [U+0F7D] (no vowel sign indicates an implicit A vowel, whilst two or more vowel signs are only used in shorthand abbreviations).
- Zero or one special signs used in transliterating Sanskrit words, such as the Anusvara [U+0F7E] or Candrabindu [U+0F83].

In addition the consonant modifier mark TSA -PHRU [U+0F39] may be inserted into this sequence immediately after the consonant it modifies (this sign is normally used with the letters PHA and BA to represent the non-Tibetan sounds of FA and VA respectively, but may also be attached to other consonants within shorthand contractions).

The existing Unicode character encoding model is able to represent any conceivable stack with the exception of highly unusual stacks that contain more than one consonant-vowel combination in a vertical arrangement (these contravene the normal rules of Tibetan writing, and are considered beyond the scope of plain text rendering; no such compound stacks are included in the Chinese proposal to encode BrdaRten characters).

Proposed Character Encoding Model

The Chinese proposal is to encode the vast majority of vertical stacks that are normally encountered as individual precomposed characters represented by a single codepoint rather than a sequence of two or more codepoints. The 962 proposed precomposed characters all comprise at least two consonant and/or vowel elements, so that minimal stacks comprising a single base consonant only (as well as the prefixed letters GA, DA, BA, MA and -A and the postfixed letters GA, NGA, DA, NA, BA. MA, -A, RA, LA and SA) would continue to be represented using the existing codepoints U+0F40 through U+0F69.

The 962 proposed precomposed characters cover all the stacks that would normally be used in writing Tibetan, both colloquial and literary (including orthographic forms such as reversed I that are found in the earliest Tibetan texts), as well as many complex stacks used to transliterate Sanskrit words that may be encountered in religious texts. However, there are still very many less commonly occurring complex stacks that are not covered by this proposal, as well as atypical stacks with multiple vowel signs and/or the TSA -PHRU [U+0F39] mark that are found in shorthand contractions (bskungs-yig). This means that some texts would have to be encoded using a mixture of precomposed glyphs and decomposed character sequences. It also means that there is a strong possibility that extensions to these 962 precomposed characters may be proposed in the future, in which case the BrdaRten characters would no longer all be encoded in a sequence that corresponds to the dictionary collation order.

However, the main issue with this proposal is that, if accepted, there would be two co-existing and equally legitimate character encoding models for Tibetan, and a text could be encoded using either model, or even a mixture of the two models. This would cause havoc for text processing applications, and yet bring no appreciable benefit to the end-user of Tibetan word processing systems, as it takes exactly the same effort for a user to select or otherwise input a Tibetan stack whether it is encoded as a single character or as a sequence of several characters (the encoding should be opaque to the ordinary user). Neither would this situation facilitate Tibetan information processing (as claimed in Document N2621), as applications would still have to be able to cope with decomposed Tibetan character sequences, and thus accepting the proposed BrdaRten characters would only add to the complexity of Tibetan text processing, rather than reduce it.

Unicode Mapping of Proposed BrdaRten Characters

The following table lists the 962 BrdaRten characters proposed in Document N2621, together with eleven BrdaRten characters proposed in Document N2558 which are no longer present in N2621.

Column 1 (N2621) gives the hexadecimal codepoint of the character given in Document N2621.

Column 2 (N2558) gives the hexadecimal codepoint of the character given in Document N2558.

Column 3 (Proposed Character Name) gives the proposed character name given in Document N2621. For some characters there are obvious typographical errors, in which case the assumed correct name is given in brackets.

Column 4 (Equivalent Decomposed Sequence) gives the Unicode character sequence in the existing character encoding model that corresponds to each proposed character.

Column 5 (Appearance) shows how the Unicode sequences in Column 4 are rendered using Uniscribe and the Ximalaya OpenType font.

Note that all of the 962 proposed precomposed BrdaRten characters are already representable using the existing character encoding model, and can be rendered correctly using existing font technology.
