Title: Towards an encoding of the Jurchen script and implications for Khitan Small Script

1. Background to encoding Jurchen. China made a proposal to encode 1,425 Jurchen characters and radicals in 2009 (N3628, L2/09-164), and prepared a revised proposal for 1,430 characters in 2010 (N3788, L2/10-101). A review of the revised proposal by Andrew West in 2010 (WG2 N3817, L2/10-125) pointed out a number of issues with the proposed repertoire, notably that almost 40% of the proposed repertoire were glyph variants, and many of these very minor glyph variants. Since then no further progress in encoding Jurchen has been made. Now that Tangut has been encoded, and Small Khitan has been accepted for encoding, we believe it is the right time to take a fresh look at Jurchen, and prepare a new proposal for encoding Jurchen.

2. About the Jurchen script. Jurchen is an extinct Tungusic language which is very closely related to Manchu, the language of the rulers of the Qing dynasty (1644–1911) of China. The Jurchen script is recorded as having been devised in 1119, and is attested in a number of monumental inscriptions, a few manuscript fragments, and inscribed artefacts dating from the Jin dynasty (1115–1234), and in several manuscript copies of Sino-Jurchen glossaries dating from the Ming dynasty (1368–1644). The glossaries produced by the Bureau of Interpreters only give phonetic transcriptions of Jurchen words using Chinese characters, but the glossaries produced by the Bureau of Translators also give the Jurchen characters for Jurchen words, which has allowed for the decipherment of monolingual Jurchen texts. In 1896 Wilhelm Grube (1855–1908) published a translation and study of a manuscript copy of the Sino-Jurchen glossary that had been acquired by the Royal Library in Berlin.

Due to Jurchen's close genetic relationship to Manchu, and because of the survival of the Sino-Jurchen glosses, the Jurchen language is relatively well-understood, and phonetic reconstructions of most Jurchen characters have been made. Very few Jurchen texts are extant, however, and compared with Tangut, Khitan Large Script, and Khitan Small Script, the corpus of Jurchen texts is tiny. Only about ten monumental inscriptions in the Jurchen script are known, as well as some architectural graffiti, sundry inscriptions on portable artefacts, and several manuscript fragments. Due to the limited amount of surviving material in the Jurchen script, we cannot be certain of the extent of the Jurchen character repertoire, and it can be hard to tell whether similar glyphs used in different contexts are the same character or not. We also have a very poor understanding of the way Jurchen characters are constructed and what the correct character forms should be. The Jurchen characters in the Sino-Jurchen manuscript glossaries are not always reliable models of Jurchen writing as they do not seem to have been written by native Jurchen speakers, and the characters in monumental stone inscriptions are very often worn and hard to read. These factors mean that many characters are attested in several different glyph forms, but it is very hard to determine which are the correct character forms and which are variant, corrupt, or misread forms.

3. Sources for the Jurchen encoded repertoire. There are very few modern scholarly studies of Jurchen that can be used as sources for an encoded Jurchen repertoire. The source for the Jurchen repertoire in the two Chinese proposals is the Nǚzhēnwén Cìdiàn 女真文辞典 [Dictionary of Jurchen] compiled by Jīn Qǐzōng (1918–2004) and published in Beijing in 1984. This dictionary, however, is more than 30 years old, and as the dictionary is entirely handwritten with very many entries for duplicates and glyph variants, it is not an ideal source. Jīn Qǐzōng and his daughter Aisin-Gioro Ulhicun later compiled a Great Dictionary of Jurchen, which was published privately in Japan by Aisin-Gioro Ulhicun in 2003. This new dictionary uses a specially-created Jurchen font, and is reputed to include additional information about some Jurchen characters that are unidentified (with no meaning or reading) in the 1984 dictionary. We would like to be able to use the 2003 dictionary as a source for encoding Jurchen, but despite extensive enquiries in Japan and China we have been unable to locate a single copy of the dictionary for sale or in a library collection anywhere in the world. We even contacted Aisin-Gioro Ulhicun directly, and asked her to help us obtain a copy, but she was unable to do so.

In the absence of the 2003 dictionary, we think that the way forward is to encode a subset of the characters given in the 1984 dictionary which are well-attested and for which a reconstructed reading is given. Almost all of these characters are sourced to one or more of the manuscript copies of the Sino-Jurchen glossary. We propose to unify glyph variants given in the 1984 dictionary where possible, so that for each character with the same reading in the same context a single character form will be selected for encoding. We estimate that this will result in a repertoire of about 800 characters. We propose not to encode at present about a hundred unidentified characters in the 1984 dictionary, leaving them, properly, for further study.

4. Radicals. The chief issue about which we would like feedback at this time is the question of the encoding of Jurchen radicals.

4.1. Radicals in Jurchen and CJK. There are 50 Jurchen radicals; 29 of them (58%) could be unified with existing Kangxi and CJK radicals. But if we were to unify them, what would we do with the other 21? There is enough space in the CJK Radicals Supplement and Kangxi Radicals blocks. If we unify Jurchen radicals with CJK and Kangxi radicals, however, this would imply that the property script=Han would have to be changed to the property script=Common for Jurchen use. We do not think that this is a good idea—or that it would be a popular one. Some users could also object to the Kangxi block being used for characters which do not derive from Kangxi lexicography.

4.2. Radicals in Jurchen, Khitan Small Script, and Khitan Large Script. At least one of the 50 Jurchen radicals is also used in Khitan Large Script; one other has been identified (see the last cell of the table below) but more research is required. Of the 20 radicals used in Khitan Small Script (currently under ballot), 15 of them are also used in Jurchen. Of those 20 radicals, 12 of them do not participate in clustering, but 8 of them do. All of those 8 are used in Jurchen, as are 7 of the other 12. Unification of Jurchen and Khitan Small Script radicals would seem to be a good idea; there is a lot of overlap.

4.2.1. Implications for Khitan Small Script. Since Khitan Small Script is under ballot, changes will need to be made to it. The 12 characters which do not cluster (and are not used in Khitan Small Script texts) should be removed to a new block “Ideographic Radicals”, the holes closed up, and some changes made to the informative notes in the names list. Code charts showing these changes are given below. First, the new Khitan Small Script table and names list is given, then the new Ideographic Radicals table and names list, showing both the Khitan Small Script characters which would be moved into it immediately, and the remaining Jurchen characters which would be added when, eventually, Jurchen is accepted for balloting.
